From The Warren County Schools...

A Lesson In Civics & National School Lunch Week

A Lesson in Civics

Several students at South Warren Elementary received a hands-on civics lesson when they were taught how to raise and lower the state flag. The lesson, from music teacher and former Air Force JROTC Cadet Cameron Eaton, stemmed from the donation of seven North Carolina flags by Sen. Angela Bryant. Eaton taught the students basic marching moves and how to properly fold the flag.

Eaton also used the lesson to talk to the students about diversity and teamwork. South Warren Elementary Principal Michelle Dunbar said she was happy some of her students had this hands-on learning opportunity.

National School Lunch Week

Warren County Schools celebrated National School Lunch Week with festivities that encouraged students to eat school lunch. "Participation in school lunch definitely increased over the week," said Daniel Harris, WCS child nutrition director.

National School Lunch Week was created in 1962 by President John F. Kennedy to celebrate the school lunch program. The theme for this year was Show Your Spirit, and was meant to get everyone excited about the benefits of eating a healthy school lunch. Each of the school's cafeterias were decorated to showcase the week.

The district's Child Nutrition department took the celebration further with Golden Tickets for students at each school. A sticker was affixed to the bottom of one lucky lunch tray each day. Winners received Golden Tickets entitling them to $5 worth of free snacks in the cafeteria.
